Wellsboro Gazette.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 22, 1891.

FRED K. WRIGHT, - - FRANK CONVEREY,
Editors and Proprietors.

DELAWARE Democrats have recently organized four clubs of the Farmers' Alliance at Dover.

NEW HAMPSHIRE Republicans have nominated Dr. Jacob H. Gallinger, a prominent member of the party, as United States Senator as successor to Speeches-of-four-days-in-length-Blair.

PARNELL has at last agreed to retire from the leadership of the Irish party in Parliament. He retires much the same as did a gentleman named Delamater from the leadership of the Republican party in Pennsylvania.

THE Quay Republicans in Wellsboro are not pleased with the appointment of Postmaster White. If the Congressional elections were held to-day it is very probable that the gentleman from Clinton county would be severely let alone by the friends of Mr. Matson, who, by the way, were his most ardent supporters.

GOVERNOR HILL has been elected to the United States Senate by the Democrats of the New York legislature by a majority of 1 on joint ballot, the vote being as follows: Hill, 78; Evarts, 77. The Democrats have done well. Senator Hill is a man of ability and will represent the Empire State in the Senate, something which cannot be said of Pennsylvania's Senators.

SENATOR CAMERON on Tuesday was re-elected to the United States Senate by a majority of 40. This isn't a small margin, but plainly demonstrates that Cameron is not the unanimous choice of his party. Packer, Squires and Losey voted for Cameron, despite the numerously signed petition from their constituents, requesting them to sustain some other candidate. Chauncey Black, the Democratic nominee, would have represented the State in the Senate.

AN order has been issued to the employes of the Cambria Iron Company, stating that on February 1st their wages will be reduced ten per cent. This reduction includes 5,000 men, from iron workers to miners, in the employ of the company. The Harrisburg Patriot says: "It will be a difficult matter for the crazy organs of tariff robbery to make these 5,000 workingmen believe that the proposed reduction has been caused by the 'cry of free traders.' And, by the way, how long has it been since 5,000 protected workingmen have had their pay increased."

SENATOR BROWN, of York, has introduced a bill for the improvement of roads. It levies a tax not to exceed 10 mills, with the addition of one day's work, and provides that a taxable man may pay his taxes in labor. It provides for three township road commissioners, unsalaried; that townships may jointly purchase machinery for road improvement; that a person refusing to act as road commissioner after election shall be fined $20, and one who refuses to act as road master after appointment, shall be fined $10. One-fourth of each year's road tax shall be laid aside for macadamized roads.

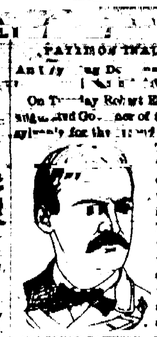
HON. M. F. ELLIOTT, the late Democratic nominee for Congress in this district, whose home is in Wellsboro, has entirely recovered from his late illness and was in Williamsport on Friday looking contented, fresh and happy. Mr. Elliott has reason to feel great pride in the splendid run he made in this strong Republican district, he having been defeated by only 51 majority against him.—Lock Haven Democrat. The Democracy of Clinton county when it attempts to congratulate Mr. Elliott on his splendid run, is somewhat out of order. The Democrats of Clinton county resemble the brigand of Peru, who, as he plunges the knife into his victim, congratulates him on his good looks and assures him that he will make a handsome appearing corpse. The Democrat was the first paper in the district to nominate Mr. Elliott for Congress.

A COMMISSION appointed to prepare a plan for the improvement of the roads of this State, has agreed upon the general features of a bill which it will recommend to the Legislature. One of the provisions of the bill is thus set forth: When it appears that a township has built a mile of permanently improved road with some form of stone or gravel foundation and covering, which shall be approved by the county engineer, then the county must build an additional mile of permanent road in the township and the State build a third mile. The State need not wait for the c[illegible], but the county and S[illegible] stand p[illegible] for two miles of [illegible] every [illegible] mile of the [illegible] Coun[illegible]

PATTISON INAUGURATED.

An Enthusiastic Demonstration—The Inaugural Address.

On Tuesday Robert E. Pattison was inaugurated Governor of the State of Pennsylvania for the third time in his life. The ceremony was [illegible] introduction into office were of the most imposing kind. The State Capitol was thronged with strangers, and the parade was as attractive and as interesting as the most expectant could desired. It was after 12 when the Gubernatorial party came on to the platform in front of the Capitol, amidst music by the band. As Governor Pattison came into sight a loud voiced man under a small pine tree yelled "Turn on the light," and a cheer went up.



GOVERNOR PATTISON.

Rev. Dr. S. C. Swallow, of Harrisburg, offered a fervent prayer, in which he thanked the Giver of all good for the prosperity of this Commonwealth, its morals and its religion. He prayed fervently for the new Administration and all incoming officers. At the conclusion of the prayer Lieutenant Governor Davies, who was acting as master of ceremonies, announced that the certificate of the Governor-elect would now be read, whereupon Ned Sumley, Chief Clerk of the Senate, stepped forward and read the important paper.

The next part of the programme, administering the oath of office, was an exceedingly solemn one. The dignified Chief Justice Paxson, of the Supreme Court, slowly read the oath, the new Governor kissed the book, and then Lieutenant Governor Davies remarked: "I now proclaim Robert E. Pattison duly elected and qualified as Governor of Pennsylvania," at the same instant the report of an artillery salute burst forth and shook the ground.

Governor Pattison signed the oath, which was witnessed by Chief Justice Paxson, and then the new Governor began his inaugural address amid cheers, as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives and Fellow-Citizens:

Chosen by the people to undertake, for a second time, the duties of the chief executive of the commonwealth, I make use of this occasion which custom has established to declare to what end I "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." A deep sense of responsibility attends the assumption of this obligation. At such an hour it is meet to look to him from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, and, with devout thanksgiving for the blessings bestowed, to seek for a continuance of his favor.

Four especially important problems confront us: First, constitutional enforcement; second, the purification of elections, involving ballot reform, personal registration and the prevention of the misuse of money in politics; third, taxation; fourth, municipal government.

Constitutional Enforcement.

The present executive will zealously strive to maintain the constitution and the laws. Our constitution as approved by the people is in many respects a model organic law. It breathes the essential spirit of popular government through all its members. By it the general welfare is sought to be promoted. In it there is no liability to any interest, individual or corporate. It was drafted by a convention controlled by as noble and choice characters as ever adorned our state. Many of its important provisions are, however, unenforced, notably article 17. That article commands nothing but what is right and forbids nothing but what is wrong. It simply provides that corporations shall treat all persons fairly, impartially and justly. It prohibits unfair discrimination against persons or places. It forbids extortion. It seeks to prevent monopolies and to compel the creatures of the law, who owe their life to the people, to be law obedient. It commands that they shall not use their granted powers to harass and oppress. It also specifically directs the legislature to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. Surely an earnest effort should be made to give adequate effect to so wise and just a part of the fundamental law. Every power of the executive shall be exercised to enforce the constitution of the state in every article and section.

When the modern state, in the exercise of its sovereign power, created that extraordinary reality called, in the irony of the law, an artificial person, it produced a being almost omnipotent for good and for evil. To deny the great benefits conferred upon society by corporate capital would be as futile as it would be foolish. But these should not blind us to the perils connected therewith in a democratic community. Many a modern charter enables a single man to wield power greater than were ever wielded by a mediæval king, and these powers, exercised under the broad seal of the state, may be and have been wielded notoriously to the injury of the state and of her people. The state, therefore, having created these artificial persons and clothed them with enormous powers, should protect herself and her natural children against their abuse and misuse. Before the state sanctions, either by judicial decision or legislative act, any extension of these powers into others still more colossal, it is to be hoped that some means may be found to place them under and to prevent their becoming superior to the commonwealth, the law and the people.

Ballot Reform.

The constitution requires that all elections shall be free and equal, but such elections are not secured by existing laws. Nor is our ballot secret. Fierce political conflicts between parties have given birth here as elsewhere [illegible] many phases of corruption [illegible] the use of money [illegible] card [illegible] extra[illegible] intim[illegible] be large em[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] the manifest evils of venalities [illegible] But without law abiding voters around them they are helpless. [illegible] the corrupt bribe-giver [illegible] the purchaser [illegible] the seller. [illegible] Hence the gangs of vicious and ignorant and purchasable voters behind the sheets at the decisive moment in defiance of the law, his bold attempt to thwart the popular intelligence and to defeat the popular will. His is the most malicious foe to our institutions for he aims at the overthrow of virtue, liberty and independence. Every dollar used to defeat the sovereign will of the people is an attack not only upon free institutions, but upon every vital interest. When money shall be king at the American polls, money will be king at American capitols.

Not a Mere Local Agitation.

It is not a mere local agitation that underlies the present demand for a thorough revision of electoral methods. A [illegible] popular movement [illegible] for ballot reform has set in, and [illegible] of the United States have already [illegible] to it. All political parties in [illegible] of the [illegible] will and the only [illegible] about such a result be [illegible] Constitutional Convention. The [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] the tendency of municipalities in the manage[illegible] of such affairs as are intrusted to them by general laws to the end that well defined principles of [illegible] might prevail all our municipal affairs. One [illegible] aim [illegible] has been to concentrate official responsibility to the electors by [illegible] ciples. But in perfecting this theory have we not measurably lost sight of the accountability which the municipality owes to the state? All powers vested in the cities and in municipal officers are theoretically, at least, delegations from the whole people, and the state should preserve its supervisory power by regular methods to prevent possible abuse through undue concentration of power, patronage and the means of corrupt influence.

Philadelphia's New Charter.

The new charter of Philadelphia was granted upon the express stipulation and provision that the vast powers conferred upon its executive should be absolutely free from political interference or control, and that public officers should be trustees for the whole people, for the minority and for each individual. And yet at the last election the city employes were repeatedly assessed, upon official approval, to pro[illegible] of the ruling party. Many of the powers of the municipality, notably that of the police, were used with virulence against the rights of the minority, which the people of the entire state are bound to protect. Would it not be wise to reserve to the commonwealth the power to remove an official whose abuse of authority transgresses the rights of the minority or of the individual?

There has been an utter disregard of enactments prohibiting the removal of public servants for political reasons, and the laws of the state, or, rather, its absence, have encouraged the appointees of the present authority of party leaders, reduces independence to a dream, not for the public servants only, but for the communities which, in their turn, are overridden by them. While patronage, as recent experience has shown, does not strengthen parties, it does strengthen party leaders of a certain type indeed, without patronage men of that type could not become leaders at all. The great defect of our municipal organization in Pennsylvania, as elsewhere, is the want of permanence of the civil service.

Safety of Public Funds.

The people demand that the greatest protection be given for the safety of the public funds. The places in which the treasurer shall deposit the public moneys should be designated by law. The discretion vested in the treasurer to select the places of deposit is a dangerous one for him and the state. It subjects him to personal importunity, and admits of favoritism and abuse. The financial management of the state should be based upon plain business principles, and there is no reason why the public moneys should not be deposited in such a manner as to afford equal security and profit with like capital of individuals.

Apportionment.

The constitution commands that the general assembly, "immediately after each United States decennial census, shall apportion the state into senatorial and representative districts."

The decennial census has been taken. The constitutional period for action is at hand. There will not be a more important measure for the consideration of the assembly than that of apportionment. It touches government in its most vital parts. Fair and just representation to all sections of the state in the general assembly and in congress underlies the whole fabric of our political system. It is the corner stone of our government. Considerations of party, of factions, of locality or of individuals have nothing to do with the subject of apportionment. This duty should be performed by the legislature upon uniform and just principles. There should not be one rule for one part of the state and a different rule for another. The constitution commands that the districts shall be composed of "compact and contiguous territory." This rule should be observed throughout the entire state. It is palpably violated by the present apportionment.

Other Suggestions.

In the limited range of discussion which such an occasion as the present imposes I may merely refer to a number of important matters. Among these I might include the necessity for an effective civil service in the state appointments, the substitution of salaries for fees, the inspection and regulation of state and private banks, and an extension of the power of the auditor general so as to include within his audit all the state accounts, and the rigid enforcement of the law referring to the investment of the sinking fund money. The mining codes should be revised in such manner as will insure the payment of damages in case of injury or loss arising from the neglect or parsimony of the mine owner.

The task before us is far reaching, comprising within its scope the whole field of material and political improvement. In administering the affairs of the commonwealth we must seek to enlarge the sources of its strength, to expand its resources, to increase its comforts and to promote its prosperity and greatness, so that the people, in harmonious progress and fulfilling a peaceful destiny, may illustrate in the grandeur and wisdom of their self control and in their majestic movement toward a more perfect society, the power of a pure Democracy to solve every problem that taxes the intelligence or stirs the vitals of civilized humanity.

ROBERT E. PATTISON.

HARRISBURG, PA., Jan. 20, 1891.

During the afternoon Governor Pattison sent to the Senate the nominations of William F. Harrity, of Philadelphia, Secretary of State; William U. Hensel, of Lancaster, Attorney General, and William McClelland, of Pittsburg, Adjutant General. The Senate confirmed the nominations by a unanimous vote.

The reception at the executive mansion in the evening is said to have been the largest and finest affair of the kind ever held in Harrisburg. It is estimated that fully 3,000 people attended. The inaugural ball was held in the City Guard Armory and was a grand affair.

The Revenue Committee.

We have present sources of revenue [illegible] in part at the session of the state required to the comments the president [illegible] a committee consisting of [illegible] the different subjects of taxation [illegible] that all assessors of property [illegible] their equal share. This [illegible] has prosecuted to work [illegible] during the past year has presented diverse reports for the considera[illegible] of the people and their representatives. I will not anticipate the discussion which must attend an examination of the several bills and plans offered, except to invoke for the whole subject thorough consideration and deliberate action and to indulge the hope that the outcome will be a measure which will materially relieve landed property in the commonwealth from the burdens which have too long lain upon it.

The authority of the state in regulating local taxation should not, however, extend further than the constitutional requirement for the uniformity of laws throughout the state, and upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax.

A multiplicity of taxing [illegible] is not just. The people do not [illegible] the [illegible] of the state [illegible] the only [illegible] with [illegible] about such a result be [illegible] Constitutional Convention. The [illegible]

—The Indian troubles are at an end, the Sioux chiefs having surrendered last Thursday.

—In round numbers the fire loss for the year of 1890 in Boston will amount to $187,000,000.

—Prof. Koch says his lymph consists of glycerine and an extract from a pure cultivation of the tubercle bacilli.

—The Census Bureau has issued a bulletin showing the Indian population of the United States to be 244,704.

—A syndicate in Boston has got control of half the Para rubber and is endeavoring to buy up all the rubber in the world.

—George Bancroft, the eminent historian, died last Saturday at Washington, after an illness of two days. His age was 90 years.

—The Russian government has decided to begin the construction of the Siberian railway this year. A land line will cost $50,000,000.

—It is officially reported that three hundred persons were transported to Siberia during 1890, but it is believed the real number is far greater.

—The new French loan of $173,800,000 was largely subscribed for by peasants, small tradesmen and artisans. About $42,000 was subscribed in England.

—It is said that the cattle men who were driven out of the Cherokee strip will, with the aid of the mortgage companies, form a great cattle range in Western Kansas.

—Reports from along the North Branch of the Susquehanna are to the effect that there is every reason to expect a devastating flood. Three threatening gorges have already formed at points equally distant from Pittston and Towanda.

—An insane man was arrested and placed in a hospital at New York one day last week, charged with having expressed a desire to kill ex President Cleveland. When arrested the man was armed with a revolver and was lying in wait for Mr. Cleveland.

—On Wednesday of last week while the wedding feast of Louis Marnelle and bride was taking place at the home of Michael Sussans, at Erie, the baby son of Sussans wandered into the kitchen, where he fell into a cauldron of maccaroni soup and was boiled to death.

—A dispatch from Tobolsk says the terrible scourge known as "black death" has reached the city of Tobolsk, the capital of West Siberia. The whole of Asiatic Russia, from Samarkand to the mouth of the Obi, is suffering from the scourge. Thousands are dying at Obdorsk, near the mouth of the Obi, owing to the lack of physicians. It seems almost hopeless to try and check the spread of the fearful disease.

—Dick Bassett is the sole inhabitant of an island in Traverse Bay, Mich., and is a man without a country. The county authorities do not recognize his existence, and the United States lays no claim to the land he occupies. He pays no taxes and is not allowed to vote. Bassett is quite wealthy and lives there as a matter of choice. The island contains about two acres of land, is under a fine state of cultivation, and is especially valuable for its fruit.

—Six weeks ago Sammie Radin fell at his home in Germany and broke his right leg below the knee. His leg was set and the family emigrated to Pittsburg. On their arrival there it was discovered that the broken bone had decayed for a space of six and a half inches. The boy's parents would not permit an amputation of the limb, but consented to have bone grafting tried and the boy was removed to Mercy Hospital. The operation was performed by several surgeons of prominence. Two black and tan puppies about five weeks old were procured. The lad's condition was excellent, he having slept well and had a good appetite. He was not put under the influence of any drug but sat up and witnessed the whole operation. One of the dogs was used, the other reserved for a second resort. Ether was administered, after which the lower end of a hind leg was amputated. The dog's bone was pinched off with forceps in about thirty pieces. These were placed in the granulations of the tissues of the boy's leg where it had sloughed off the bone. The wound was then covered with oiled silk and the leg dressed with antiseptic gauze. The dog died from the effects of the ether. The physicians say that everything favors a successful operation.

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.: Gentlemen—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours truly,
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.,
Office, 215 Summit St.

We give $100 for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

Special Announcement.

We have made arrangements with Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., publishers of "A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases," which will enable all our subscribers to obtain a copy of that valuable work free, by sending their address (enclosing a two-cent stamp for mailing same) to Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt. This book is now recognized as standard authority upon all diseases of the horse, as its phenomenal sale attests, over four million copies having been sold in the past ten years, a sale never before reached by any publication in the same period of time. We feel confident that our patrons will appreciate the work, and be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a valuable book.

It is necessary that you mention this paper in sending for the "Treaties." This offer will remain open for only a short time.—Dec. 18-6t.

OWING largely, no doubt, to the excessively bad weather prevailing at the time the county Soldiers' Reunion was held here last August, Geo. Cook Post, G. A. R., of this borough, incurred considerable indebtedness, and the "boys" of the Post are striving with commendable zeal to cancel the same. As a means to such end they will serve an oyster supper, with garnishments of various kinds, for a small charge, at the Post Hall on Tuesday evening, January 27th, under the management of the Woman's Relief Corps connected with the Post. The good folks of the town and all others are invited to come and be served on that occasion.

—A dwelling house occupied by Dr. F. Ramsey, of Blossburg, was badly damaged by fire and water last Saturday about noon. The fire started in a bedroom up stairs, the origin of which is a mystery. The house is owned by Mr. Joseph Allen and is insured.

—The Elkland Furniture Company manufactures fourteen styles of bed chamber suits, eleven sideboards and five bed trees, all in oak, made and finished in the best manner. The suits range in price from $20 to $65; sideboards, $19 to $65; hall trees, $14.50 to $24.

—Mr. Charles Buckley's farm at Osceola, is said to be one of the largest and best in the county. It contains 600 acres. Mr. Bulkley raises heavy Percheron draft horses and Holstein cattle, devotes considerable land to tobacco and carries on a general farming business.

—The Middlebury Free Baptist Church and community, on Locey Creek, are being favored with revivals under the labors of Rev. W. S. Smith and wife. Thirty have professed conversion and twenty have given their names for baptism and membership to the Church.

—Just at noon last Thursday the residence of Mr. Samuel Scranton, at Marsh Creek, was discovered to be on fire. The fifty men in the employ of Mr. Scranton, who had just sat down to dinner, left the table and soon squelched the flames. The house was damaged to the extent of $25.

—Pensions have been granted to the following residents of Tioga county since our last report: Additional—Thomas Dix, Rutland. Reissue—John W. White, Sabinsville. Increase—Robert C. Cox, Wellsboro; David Houghtaling and Leroy P. Davis, Osceola; Asa M. Richardson, Potter Brook.

—The large barns of Mr. J. T. Hager, one mile west of Mansfield, were burned at an early hour last Monday morning. The fire was caused by the explosion of a lantern. About fifty tons of hay, 200 bushels of grain and all the farming tools on the place were consumed. The property was insured for $1,500.

—The Coudersport Enterprise man is either very unkind or else he has been "taken in and done for" at some time in the remote past. Listen to what he says about Tioga county widows: "Knoxville, Tioga county, boasts of having twenty-six widows. From all of which may the good Lord deliver us."

It is his business to know whether the person he sells to is of that kind, and if he does not convince himself he must refuse him. Otherwise he is liable.

—The large frame house on the Logan farm, near Jackson Summit, occupied by the family of Mr. Floyd Adams, was burned last Monday night. Mr. Adams succeeded in removing nearly all the furniture on the lower floor, but the household effects in the chambers and the stores in the cellar were destroyed. The furniture was insured for $200.

Nickel plated dropping handles, good locks, etc.

—Senator J. M. Woods has introduced a bill in the State Senate to reimburse counties for the expense of erecting bridges carried away by the June flood of 1889. Tioga county has already paid out about $70,000 in replacing bridges destroyed by the big freshet, and will be considerably benefited if the proposed measure is passed. The people of Tioga county should not require too much urging to send a strong memorial to the Legislature asking for the passage of the bill.

—Mr. E. Jacobson is soon to remove to New York city, having exchanged his house on Meade street, the block of tenement houses, a dwelling house on East avenue and his horse and carriages, in part payment for a $22,000 property in the metropolis. Mr. Charles E. Schultz, with whom Mr. Jacobson traded, is a retired sea captain. He will occupy the Jacobson residence on Meade street. The Boston clothing store will be continued under the management of Mr. M. E. Jacobson.

—Mr. John Baynes, of Mansfield, a trackman on the Tioga railroad, started out to his work last Friday morning in his usual health. In the middle of the forenoon he complained of feeling very bad and started for home. When about twenty rods from the house he fell to the sidewalk and expired. Heart disease is said to have been the cause of his death. He was 58 years of age and a highly respected citizen. About fourteen years ago Mr. Baynes' brother died in the same way ten rods from the spot where Mr. Baynes died.

—Last week Monday the stockholders of Smythe Park Association met at Mansfield and elected the following officers: President, J. M. Barden; Vice President, D. J. Butts; Secretary, J. A. —Leading lumber dealers in Williamsport, says the Gazette, report that the outlook is very promising in logging. While some of the Western loggers report that they were hampered by the lack of snow, the trouble in this region was because the snow was so very deep that the work was temporarily suspended. By actual measurement the snow was three and a half feet deep in some portions of Potter, Tioga, Elk and Clearfield counties. However, it is estimated by competent persons that over 300,000,000 feet of logs will be boomed this year at Williamsport.

—Mr. Kerran Connors, a well-known member of George Cook Post, G. A. R., died at his home on Water street last Tuesday morning, aged 65 years. Deceased was one of General Logan's men, having enlisted in a regiment being raised by that officer in Southern Illinois (Egypt) at the breaking out of the Rebellion. Mr. Connors had been a resident of Wellsboro for some years, coming here from Antrim, where he had been engaged in the mines. His death was the result of diseases contracted while in service. The remains were taken to Corning yesterday for burial.

—The Lawrenceville Herald says the authorities of that place have laid in a supply of dynamite to be used in blowing up the ice jam in the Cowanesque river as soon as the water begins to rise. It is said the ice is gorged all the way from the point where the two rivers meet above R. W. Stewart's farm, a distance of at least two miles. The oldest inhabitants do not remember any such accumulation of ice in our rivers. It is earnestly hoped that the dynamite will be effectual in moving this immense body of ice down stream when the time comes without danger.

—The new Board of County Commissioners, when the bill of $27.50 for a quarter's water tax was presented, pronounced the bill exorbitant and refused to pay the claim unless the Water Company would make a reduction. The company decided not to make a reduction in the rate, and last Saturday morning Superintendent Kress directed a man to shut off the supply of water from the court house. The commissioners promptly changed their minds and paid the bill. The incident has caused a good deal of comment, and it is generally considered that the Water Company made a mistake in not accepting the $10 offered by the commissioners for thirty days' use of water.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1888.

The woman of the present is a paragon of style.
But the fellow who can win her love deserves her sweetest smile.
She's a girl whose fads and fancies often take us by surprise,
Though at heart she may be honest and conservative and wise.

The woman of the present has a thousand charming ways,
And despite of fashion's bobbles is a subject meet for praise.
Despite the imperfections that are common to us here,
If she does her duty nobly, she'll be noted in her sphere.

The woman of the present loves to mingle in society.
But the manliest gentlemen you meet are neither vain nor loud.
You'll find her at the tennis court, and often look in vain
And when you walk or drive with her you'm in enchanted land.

The woman of the present is inclined to flirt, it's said;
We'll let that question go and ask if she can make good bread.
And 'tis the crack if she can make good cake or pumpkin pie.
That would make a epicure quietly and calmly turn to rye.

The woman of the present, so we know her to be fair,
We hope some day she'll win the love of a true man;
And when we behold such a creature we may say
We trust we have seen a woman who is the type of the day.

M. E. T. Longstreet.

THE EMIGRANT GIRL.

Down through the skylight of the great emigrant ship the sun beat like a gigantic burning glass; the blue flies buzzed to silly in the window frames, and Honora Hough sat uneasily on her hard wooden bench, her heart throbbing restlessly at every sound.

"Is that 12 o'clock striking?" she ventured to ask at last of a good-natured official who was writing at a tall desk close by.

"That's 12 o'clock," he said, carefully blotting page 91 before he turned to page 92.

"And no one has come for me yet?"

"No one has come for you yet."

And the official commenced on a new page with a fresh dip of the pen.

Honora's heart beat faster than ever; a sort of mist seemed to gather over her blue eyes. Did she fall asleep, or was it only a sort of waking swoon from which she aroused to hear some one saying close to her:

"Ever since this time yesterday, and not a soul has inquired for her. I think it's more than likely she'd be glad of a decent place. Wouldn't you, young woman?"

"I want some one right away," said a spare, hard-featured, elderly woman, with a basket on her arm and a crimp cap under her bonnet. "My daughter is very sick, and I can't get along no longer without help. The wages ain't high, but it's a good home for any young woman; that I'll guarantee."

Honora drew a long breath, glanced once more wistfully at the window, and then decided.

"I'll go," said she.

Perhaps it was as well that she arrived at that conclusion. The sickness incident to the sea-voyage and the long waiting for the "friends" who had not come had pretty well undermined her nervous system, and she was at least spared the shock of the "fire," which, although not serious merely a spark from the still smoldering cigar of a gentleman visitor falling in a scrap-basket full of torn envelopes and papers—was sufficient to give all the employes a good fright, and to erase from the emigrant bureau, world all trace of poor little Honora Hough's whereabouts as penciled down on one of the slips of paper that were destroyed.

She went home with Mrs. Carey, helped nurse poor little Sarah Carey on her weary journey out of the world, took filial care of the old lady herself in the days when rheumatism racked her every bone and joint, and finally married Ben himself—Mrs. Carey's son and Sarah's brother—who, alas for the reign of romance! was a dealer in rags and bottles, and daily drove a cart clamorous with bells and drawn by a subdued old gray horse about the streets.

"I always thought," confessed Honora, "that I should marry a cattle king whose [illegible] of a rich gold-digger, or something of that kind. People get things twisted all sorts of ways in the old country. But I am sure Ben is nicer than any cattle king could be!"

"If I was a gold-digger, though," shrewdly observed Ben, "I might have given you a bigger house than this little one-storied shanty, and something besides calico to wear."

"I don't want anything but you, Ben!" said Honora, her pretty, quaint brogue accentuated, as it always was, by strong emotion.

"And no millionaire of the lot could love you better than I do, Nora," said the young man, simply.

"It was all very well, this love-in-a-cottage business, while they were well and trade held its own. But even in the rag-and-bottle profession there is competition—and the horse fell lame, and Ben Carey lay ill for weeks with a low type of fever. Then it was that, what with nursing Ben all day, and walking the floor with the teething baby at night, and trying to edge in a little clear-starching and fine neeze work for a neighbor's ladies' [illegible] up.

At [illegible] where they were overhauling and cleaning up. The butler sold me the old things. Oh, I tell you, Nora, it was a fine house! Eh? What's the matter, Patty?"

For Nora had turned pale, and began to tremble.

"Ben," said she, "dear Ben, don't laugh at me; but when I look at this brass warming-pan the old hills and the old house rise up before my eyes, and I can almost hear my mother's voice again. Let us go to this place, Ben. Let us see if this butler man don't know something of the people at home. For I'm sure quite sure—Ben, that this is the very shining pan, with the letter H for Hough, that used to hang on the walls at home."

"But it can't be, Nora," said Ben.

"Why can't it be, Ben?"

"Well, to please you, my girl, I'll take you there to-morrow," said Ben. "Not that I think it'll be any use. Look at this lot o' picter books. I got 'em cheap. I thought you could pick out something for the boy before we turned 'em over for paper stock."

"Who is that, John? Whose voice is that I hear?"

"I beg pardon, sir; I hope it ain't disturbed you," said the butler, apologetically. "It's a person in the rag-and-bottle business, sir, as I made bold to dispose of some of the old house's utensils. You was kind enough to tell me, sir."

But here Honora pushed herself valiantly forward holding the brass implement like a golden shield before her; for she had polished it brilliantly until now it shone and glittered bravely.

"It was this old-fashioned warming-pan," said she. "Please, sir, I'm almost sure it used to hang on the home wall in County Cavan when I was a girl."

"And who are you?" asked the tall old man with the sparkling light-blue eyes and the duke of Wellington nose who stood towering in the doorway.

"I am Mrs. Carey, sir. Born Honora Hough!" simply explained the girl.

"Honora Hough, who came over in the Merchant Prince, July 9, 18—, and who disappeared unaccountably, leaving no trace behind her?" said the old man.

"Yes, sir, I came over in the Merchant Prince, July 9, 18—," admitted Honora, with a little gasp. "And—and I think you must be my Uncle Warren, for your eyes are like my mother's, and when you speak to me my heart answers back to the tone of your voice."

She went up to him and put her hand confidingly in his. He bent over and kissed her.

"I believe," said he, "you are the girl we have looked for so long. My dear, I buried your aunt a month ago. There is a vacant place in my home and in my heart. Who should fill it like my sister's child? Will you come here and live, little Nora?"

"Oh, I couldn't leave Ben," said Honora, quickly.

"Who is Ben?"

"My husband."

"Woman, do you suppose I want to part wife and husband?" said the old man, a twinkle of humor in his shrewd eyes. "A fine, frank-faced young fellow he seems to be," as he extended his hand to Ben. "You and yours are welcome here."

Ben Carey smiled.

"There's a baby, too," said he, "that we couldn't very well leave behind."

"I said 'you and yours,'" repeated the tall old man—"Roderby," to the amazed butler, "call a cab for the lady to go back for her child, and get the front rooms ready for my niece and her family. And now, tell me, Honora, how it was that we missed you when we went to Palace garden for you that day?"

"I don't know, uncle," said Honora. "I waited there twenty-four hours, and no one came, and then I took a place with Ben's mother, and afterward I married Ben."

"It's perfectly unaccountable," said her uncle, knitting his brows until they made a level line of snow. "But never mind, so long as you are here now. The bureau of emigration should be more efficient—that is all."

For neither uncle nor niece knew anything of the smoldering cigar-spark and the fire that had been so promptly extinguished by the fire department. A trifle in itself—such things happen daily in a great city—yet it had wrought great changes in Honora's life.

"And if I hadn't been in the rag business," said honest Ben, "my life, here, never would have come into her fortune."—Fireside Companion.

How the Indians Play Polo.

The following description, recently received from an officer in Thibet, of the game as played there by the natives will be read with interest by polo players in this country: "We spent a very pleasant day at a place called Maham, about ten miles from Simla, toward the interior. While out there I met a number of Ladaki men going to play polo after the regular Thibetan fashion, so we followed to see the game. The ground is up a very steep hill, and was a piece about fifteen yards broad by fifty or sixty long, and, as you can imagine, by no means level. The men who play are very good fellows, all from Shadoo, close to Gilgit, and who spend their time here as wood carriers; in fact, the ponies they play on have to carry heavy loads of wood for six days, and then, by way of a holiday, on Sunday they play polo. They skedaddled if we would play, and [illegible] they would like it. [illegible] of their [illegible] sadness [illegible]

GOOD CHICKAREE SOUP.

[illegible] Colonel Eldridge and you're here [illegible] night is an isolated house on the road to Vicksburg and Haines' Bluff. We had been skirmishing all day over the rough Mississippi roads and were hungry, and tired. We at we'd slip to the enemy's kitchen, where we were confronted by the indignant beauty. The personnel consisted of a corpulent old lady, two pretty daughters and a wrinkled aunty. When they realized that we had come for supper and lodging they retired excitedly to a corner of the kitchen, where they held a council of war.

"Look here!" said the colonel, somewhat sharply, "we are hungry. Quit your whispering and get us something to eat."

The mother stepped boldly from the rank, and confronting the colonel, announced the melancholy fact that there were no edibles about the premises.

"Give us anything," replied the famished colonel. "We are not fastidious."

"Well, you see, sah," replied the lady, impressively, "first there were our own soldiers, then came the Yankees yesterday, and between the two they ate us out of house and home."

"This is serious," said the colonel to me in an undertone, and then aloud, "Go out into the shed and bring me an armful of wood."

Wondering what his scheme could be, I went out into the yard and returned with a dozen large faggots. The colonel heaped them upon the expiring embers on the hearth in one corner of the kitchen, where they soon blazed up brightly. Then taking a kettle to the pump, he filled it with water and set it on the fire to boil.

"What are you going to do?" asked the old lady.

"Make soup!" was the colonel's laconic reply. There was a small grindstone on the dresser. This the colonel laid in the kettle.

The enemy was beginning to manifest some interest in our culinary operations.

"What kind ob soup am dat gwine to be?" asked the colored servant, with a grin.

"Grindstone soup!" snapped the colonel. He seized a ladle, and, lifting the lid off the kettle, dipped out some of the water and tasted it with great gravity.

"H'm!" he cried, addressing me, "not yet strong enough? Will you please get another armful of wood?"

I did as requested, to the consternation of the enemy, which saw its meager stock of fuel burn away. After a pause the colonel again raised the lid to taste the mess.

"Ah!" he said, smacking his lips with satisfaction, "that's something like! May I trouble you for a little salt and pepper?"

Amid great tittering on the part of the ladies the condiments were brought.

"That's a queer way of making soup!" cried one of the girls, with a smothered giggle.

"Yes; it's economical. Have you a little flour handy?"

After a moment's hesitation the flour was brought.

"And now a couple of onions, please."

"There are no onions, sah!" cried the lady of the house.

"Then bring in some more wood, George; the stone is not soft yet."

I was just starting to the door when the commander stopped me.

"Coming to think, I believe there are some onions left," she said meekly. "Mildred, go and see."

Mildred, the older daughter, disappeared and returned after a while with three fine onions. The colonel cut them into bits, and with befitting solemnity shaved them into the soup. I could scarcely refrain from laughing.

"And now, ma'am, a slice of good fat bacon if you please," said the colonel.

This was too much for the enemy. The old lady advanced. There was fire in her eye.

"You can't get another thing from us!" she shouted. "You Yankees think you are smart. There ain't any bacon in the house, and if there were you wouldn't get it!"

"Very well," replied the colonel calmly. He gave me a look and I brought in the rest of the wood.

"Here's your pork," said the youngest daughter, angrily.

The day was won. Ten minutes afterward there stood on the table as good and thick a soup as any of us ever tasted. The flavor of the grindstone could not be detected.—Philadelphia Times.

Bangs, Puffs and Curls.

Don't spoil your own hair with dyes and washes, for youth and leisure are not "forever and a day," and some time you might have to go back to the old color, and then you would find it, if there was any left, a shade that was never seen on sea or land.

HOW TO HUNT THE COON.

[illegible] A Party for Taking Refuge in the Hollow Tree in Question.

There is but one way of hunting the coon. Hunted only at night, to follow him the boldest rider must dismount, yet he who risks neck and limb, or melts or freezes for sport's sake, and deems no sport manly that has not a spice of danger or discomfort in it, must not scoff at this humble pastime for such reason.

On leaving the highway that leads nearest to the hunting ground, the way of the coon hunters takes them, in darkness or feeble lantern light, over rough and uncertain footing, till the cornfield's edge is reached and the dogs cast off. Away go the hounds, their course only indicated by the rustling of the corn leaves, as they range through the field, until one old truth-teller gives tongue on the trail of Br'er Coon, who perhaps has brought his whole family out for a nocturnal picnic. The hounds sweep straight away, in full cry, on the hot scent to sill or swamp, where their steadfast baying proclaims that the game is treed.

Then follows a pellmell scramble toward the musical uproar. Stones, brambles and all the inanimate enemies that lie in wait for man when he hastens in the dark, combine to trap, bump, bruise, sprain, scratch, and bemire the hurrying hunters.

Then when all have gathered at the center of attraction, where the excited hounds are raving about the base of some great tree, the lightest and boldest climber volunteers to go aloft into the upper darkness and shake the quarry down or shoot him if may be. If he succeeds in accomplishing the difficult task what a melee ensues.

Fewer voices never broke the stillness of night with sounds more unearthly than the medley of raging, yelping, and growling, cheering and vociferous orders given forth by dogs, coon and hunters, while hillside and woodland toss to and fro a mere discordant bandage of echo.

The coon is not a great beast, but a tough and sharp-toothed one, who carries beneath his gray coat and for ribs a stout heart and wonderful vitality, and a tussle with a veteran of the tribe of cornfield robbers tests the pluck of dogs and the coolness of men.

If the coon takes refuge in a tree too tall and limbless for his pursuers to climb, there is nothing for them but to keep watch and wait till daylight discovers him crouched in his lofty perch.

A huge fire enlivens the long hours of guard-keeping. A foraging party repairs to the nearest cornfield for roasting ears and the hunters shorten the slow night tide with munching scorched corn, sauced by joke and song and talc of coon hunts of bygone years.

The waning moon throbs into view above a serrated hill-crest, then climbs the sky, while the shadows draw eastward, then pales in the dawn and when it is a blotch of white cloud in the zenith, a sunrise gun welcomes day and brings the coon tumbling to earth. Or, perhaps, not a coon, but some vagrant house cat is the poor reward of the long watch. Then the weary hunters plod homeward to breakfast and the pelting of their trophies to the barn door.

When the sweet acorns, dropping in the frosty night, tempt the coon to a later feast, there is as good sport and primer pelty. In any of the nights wherein this sport may be pursued, the man of lazy mold and contemplative mind loves best the hunt deemed unsuccessful by the more ardent hunters, when the hounds strike the trail of a wandering fox and carry a tide of wild music, flooding and ebbing over valley and hilltop, while the indolent hunter reclines at ease, smoking his pipe and listening, content to let more ambitious hunters stumble over ledges and wallow through swamps in pursuit of the elusive coon.—Forest and Stream.

CUPID AS AN EDITOR.

Business Being Dull, He Resorts to the Use of Printer's Ink.

Here, according to the Memphis Avalanche, are some advertisements that appeared in a matrimonial paper in that town:

"On the market! A blue-eyed blonde of nineteen and 135 pounds, who will be a sweet girl graduate in June, and whose father makes 100 bales of cotton, would like to be presented for some fun as soon as school days are over. You need not write unless you are handsome, for I will not marry an ugly man. Now, boys, if you write and send stamp and your picture and this ad, you will either get it back or a nice letter from a pretty southern girl. Come, come, come, the summer now is here.

"A farmer who does not use tobacco, liquor or gamble desires correspondence with pretty ladies of neat form, good disposition, good housekeepers, good singers and religiously inclined. Presbyterians preferred.

"Well, gents, why not try on a little brunette of eighteen sparkling summers? Would like to correspond with a number of young gentlemen and receive some nice letters. Now, boys, please put in your best licks and write and find out all about me. Every one that writes and sends a stamp will truly receive a prompt reply. The first will receive a photo of myself. My object is matrimony. Write soon, papa don't care.

"Look here, boys! Here is your chance. I am a jolly little postmistress, having a very good education; height five feet and weight 107 pounds; I have a fair complexion, light blue eyes and light hair. I wish to correspond with several young gentlemen of good character and some means. I am in the ages of eighteen and twenty-six. [illegible]

Small Pill. Small Dose. Small Price.

"Hello! Tom. Glad to see you, old fellow! It's almost ten years since we were married. Sit down; let's have an experience meeting. How's the wife?"

"Oh! she's so-so, same as usual,—always wanting something I can't afford."

"Well, we all want something more than we've got. Don't you?"

"Yes; but I guess I want will be my master. I started to keep down expenses; and now Lil says I'm 'mean,' and she's tired of saving and never having anything to show for it. I saw your wife down street, and she looked as happy as a queen!"

"I think she is; and we are economical, too,—have to be. My wife can make a little go further than anyone I ever knew; yet she's always surprising me with some dainty contrivance that adds to the comfort and beauty of our little home, and she's always merry as a lark. When I ask how she manages it, she always laughs and says: 'Oh! that's my secret!' But I think I've discovered her secret. When we married, we both knew we should have to be very careful, but she made one condition; she would have her Magazine. And she was right. I wouldn't do without it myself for double the subscription price. We read it together, from the title-page to the last word; the stories keep our hearts young; the synopsis of important events and scientific matters keeps us posted so that I can talk understandingly of what is going on; she always trying some new idea from the household department; she makes all her dresses and those for the children, and she gets all her patterns for nothing, with the Magazine; and we saved Joe when he was sick with the croup, by doing just as directed in the Sanitarian Department. But I can't tell you half!"

"What wonderful Magazine is it?"

"Demorest's Family Magazine, and—"

"What! Why that's what I'd wanted so bad, and I told her it was an extravagance."

"Well, my friend, that's where you made a grand mistake, and one you'd better rectify as soon as you can. I'll take your sub. right here, on my wife's account; she's bound to have a chin fan-sal in time for our tin wedding next month. My gold watch was the premium I got for getting up a club. Here's a copy, with the new Premium List for clubs,—the biggest thing out! If you don't see in it what you want, you'd only to write to the publisher and tell him what you want, whether it is a tack-hammer or a new carriage, and he will make special terms for you, either for a club or part cash. Better subscribe right off and surprise Mrs. Tom. Only $2.00 a year—will save fifty times that in six months. Address 10 cents direct to the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th Street, New York, for a specimen copy containing the Premium List."

"The Most Successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. Best proof beyond all."

Brooklyn, Conn., May 5, '80.

Dr. B. J. Kendall Co.,

Sirs:—Last Summer I cured a Curb on my horse with your celebrated Kendall's Spavin Cure and it was the best job I ever saw done. I have a dozen empty bottles, having used it with perfect success curing every thing I tried it on. My neighbor had a horse with a very bad Spavin that made him lame. He asked me how to cure it. I recommended Kendall's Spavin Cure. He cured the Spavin in just three weeks.

Yours respectfully,

Wollcott Walker.

Dr. B. J. Kendall Co.,

Dear Sirs:—I have tried several bottles of your Kendall's Spavin Cure with perfect success, on a valuable and Blood Horse, for a Bone Spavin, also with a Bone Spavin. The cure is now entirely free from lameness and shows no bunch on the joint.

Respectfully, E. F. Brown.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

Monroe, La., May 8, '80.

Dr. B. J. Kendall Co.,

Gents:—I think it my duty to inform you my business is now far famed Kendall's Spavin Cure. I had a four year old filly which I prized very highly. She had a very severe swollen leg. I tried about eight different kinds of medicines which did no good. I purchased a bottle of your Kendall's Spavin Cure which cured her in four days.

Truly yours, Wm. Dunn.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent by any address on receipt of price by the proprietors.

A planter in Alpharetta, Ga., had an acre of cotton, every stalk of which is said to have been of a deep red color, leaf, boll and bloom. This novel crop is the product of seed derived three years ago from two stalks of red cotton found in a cotton field. If this variety can be perpetuated it will likely mean a fortune to the successful planter.

The Danish government pays a bounty for the destruction of seals, and there is an energetic hunting and slaughter of these creatures. The reason is that the seals destroy the fish on which so many of the population depend for food and employment. It is found that where seal hunting has been most active the catch of the fish has increased.
